Introduction

Tourism Authority of Thailand

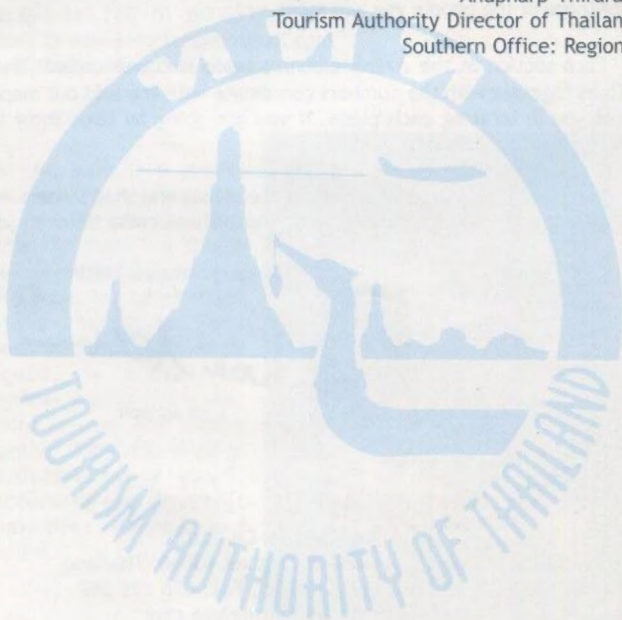

As part of the promotion of the vast culture, craft and art of Thailand, the Tourism Authority of Thailand is extremely pleased to participate in this exceptional guide.

The Art & Culture guide offers the viewer a powerful glimpse of ancient traditions in crafts and art that continue today as a basic way of life for many. In addition, contemporary artists bring new dimensions and concepts within their work.

Phuket has an abundance of quality shops, studios and special places for you to visit. In this comprehensive guide, they are easy to locate so you may browse and appreciate what each has to offer.

An entire history awaits you! Enjoy exploring.

Anupharb Thirarath
Tourism Authority Director of Thailand,
Southern Office: Region 4

Words From Art & Culture

For over two years, Art & Culture - Phuket - has proven to be the most trusted guide in suggesting some intriguing shops, studios and special places and the personalities behind them. We are pleased to be again expanding to include interesting areas beyond Phuket.

Art & Culture - Phuket and Beyond is designed to explore many of the fascinating points of interest off Phuket island and into the southern provinces.

As this publication continues to grow you will be amazed at the vast culture, products and special southern places that will be introduced to you. By example, in this issue, read about CS Pattani Hotel - a resort that takes every opportunity to promote its surroundings and cultural traditions of the area - and only a short flight away.

William Warren, author of many books including Art and Crafts of Thailand and Lanna Style and Lonely Planet - Thailand author, Joe Cummings are joined in their cultural commentary by Andaman Style author, Ping Amranand.

In addition to our Thailand distribution, we continue spreading our wings overseas. Great appreciation of art and culture lies in the skies with Thai Airways. Look for this publication at your favourite travel agency, Thai Airways and Tourism Authority of Thailand offices overseas.

Rent a car or hire a taxi - but plan to tour with this guide in hand, you'll be pleasantly surprised by the remarkable array available and the knowledge of the people you will meet.

Each section of the Art & Culture guide is colour coded. These colours together with the numbers coordinate with the fold out map to assist you in locating each place. If you are going by taxi, show the driver the addresses written in Thai.

We invite you to explore and meet the artists and shop owners who bring samples of Asia's creative talent and cultural collectibles to you.

Mr Wolfgang

Decorated with love and care, you will immediately feel comfortable surrounded by textiles, handicrafts and soothing aromas. The Karen hill tribes in Northern Thailand craft the selection of sumptuous silk wall hangings, shawls and accessories. Other items include citronella candles, Angkor art sandstone sculptures and hand-woven yaan lipao (a fine fern) handbags. Distinctively designed mirrors, lamps, bowls and vases complement the décor at their two locations.

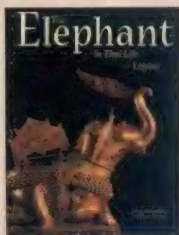

Cultural Traditions & Contemporary Ideas

Elephants

In both physical and legendary form, the elephant has existed as long as the kingdom itself, an intricate part of the culture long before the first written Thai inscriptions were composed.

On one level, it has inspired Thai proverbs (such as a famous, controversial one comparing the role of women to the elephant's hind legs and another, less well known, that asserts "When inspecting an elephant, examine its tail; when inspecting your future wife, examine her mother") and given rise to superstitions (the belief that walking under an elephant brings good luck and, in the case of a pregnant woman, an easy delivery).

The elephant's most outstanding feature, both visually and in the uses to which it is put, is its long, flexible, extremely sensitive trunk, which ends in one or two 'fingers.' The tip of the trunk, the most sensitive part, is the source of the elephant's keen sense of smell, as well as the means by which it 'speaks' in a wide range of sounds to signal fear, rage, pain, pleasure, and, some think, affection.

Elephant toe-nails, shaped like pears, are dark-colored at birth and almost creamy-white later. In ancient times, the number of nails was an important factor in evaluating an animal, and any with twenty nails, five on each foot, were said to be reserved for royal use.

Designing and creating contemporary and functional ceramics is the sisters' forte, while other family members assist in the business of exporting, wholesaling and retailing the endless array of items. A true Phuket family company. This innovative studio reflects an artistic flair at every turn. Unique native clay is spun into bowls, cups, place-settings and serene shapes in its natural tin tone. Imaginative blends of colour and texture are added, capturing the timeless beauty of the stoneware. Memorable touches of the Andaman Sea hues of emerald green and blue are seen in many of the original pieces while the fresh tones of the coral reef are delightfully combined in others. All ceramics are made on site.

You may be inclined to walk by this flashy gallery, but if you take a closer look, you will be pleasantly surprised. What appears to be contemporary chinaware is in fact Thailand's own traditional hand-painted Benjarong Porcelain.

Benjarong, also called '5 colour style', dates back to the Ming Dynasty of China. For hundreds of years Benjarong was exclusively made for Thai royalty. The traditional intricate decorative designs covering the entire surface are floral motifs, cultural symbols and festivals. Years of apprenticeship were required of the most gifted artists to be able to produce a worthy piece for the king. Siam Ceramic Handmade has gathered the finest artisans using techniques developed in the 18th century to produce the finest museum collectable quality.

The range of this shop's selection includes also Laos and Thai Buddha images of bronze and alabaster and religious icons from Burma and Cambodia. Worldwide shipping service is available.

Phuket 's Sino Portuguese Past

A private journey into Phuket's past begins with a walk down Thalang Road. It was here at the turn of the century that the Chinese merchants pursued their business before withdrawing into their ornate homes for the evening.

Over 200 years ago Hokkien Chinese immigrants began arriving in Phuket. Most were following new opportunities. Tin mining was the business in Penang Malaysia and Phuket that attracted these hard working people. Phuket was an important trade center for Indian, Malay, Arab and European traders who exchanged goods from the rest of the world for the tin and rubber. The British colonialist, Francis Light, in the 1700's, had made Penang the first of the British Straits Settlement. He married a local Thai girl and tried unsuccessfully to bring Phuket into the colonial fold.

Land leases were granted to many of the Chinese in Phuket and fortunes were made. It is estimated that by the early 1900's over 30,000 Chinese were working in the Phuket mines and as merchants.

To display their newfound wealth, large mansions were built blending Chinese and European architectural styles. It is more commonly known as Sino Portuguese style as the Portuguese were amongst the first successful European traders in the region.

All the houses are typically long and narrow. Carved teak louvers on the windows and wooden inlaid doors marking Chinese characteristics are combined with European designs of Corinthian columns or Doric decoration. Chinese writing above the door showcases the owner's family name. In the center of the expansive narrow homes an open-air garden, which adds natural light and beauty, also circulates a cooling breeze. Colourful ceramic tiles in subtle ochre shades grace the floors. Depending on the wealth of the family the tiles were often imported from Europe. Furnishings were of Chinese origin with elaborate carvings. A further glimpse at this middle class life style of bygone days can be seen on nearby Krabi road and the small Soi Romanee. On the corner of Yaoworat and Dibuk roads is an example with Doric columns on the lower level and Corinthian styling on the upper level.

Phuket has over 150 Sino Portuguese buildings listed for preservation by the Fine Arts Department. Although this history has all but disappeared from the island, a walk in Old Phuket Town reflects the rich and diverse past of its multicultural heritage.

Jim Thompson's vision enabled the art of traditional Thai silk-making to expand beyond its own geographical borders, but more impressively beyond the realm of existing habitual motifs and colours. Jim Thompson brought influence into Thai silk, turning traditionally functional fabrics into fashion fabrics, accessories and home décor items. Time-honoured heritage and innovation brought together and balanced in their own strengths of beauty and style.

Thai Cuisine

Rice Spoiled Fish Rotten

Food plays an important role in Thai idioms and proverbs whose intended meaning have nothing to do with eating.

khao buut plaa raaa 'rice spoiled fish rotten', a reference to a long-term marriage or relationship gone sour khao mai plaa man 'new rice, moist fish', the honeymoon phase of a relationship kin haew 'eat water chestnuts', to fail at something kwaa thua ja suk ngaa kaw mai 'Before the peanuts are done, the sesame will burn', an admonition to do things in the proper order. This saying offers added poetry in the way all words in the first clause - 'before the peanuts are done' - are spoken in parallel low tones, while two out of the three of the tones in the second clause - 'the sesame will burn' - are falling tones mai kin sen 'not eating noodles', when two people refuse to speak to one another due to a falling out pak chii rohy naa 'coriander leaf sprinkled on top', performing a deed for appearances only sen yai 'big noodle', important person

waan yen 'sweet cool' (a type of iced Thai dessert), easy-going

Crafts of Southern Thailand

The crafts of southern Thailand range from highly evolved disciplines - some would say art forms - to the production of simple objects made for everyday use. But a common thread that runs through them is that all are imbued with their own characteristics, a result of the region's unique cultural, geographical and environmental factors. For instance, the mat and basket weavers of the Peninsula utilize a great variety of plants, some of which flourish only in this region, such as the lumchiek (Pandanus odoratissimus), a speciality of Krabi mat weavers, and the celebrated yan lipao vine fern (Lygodium flexuosum). Moreover, being on the crossroads of culture and trade for two millennia, it is not surprising to find crafts in southern Thailand whose techniques or designs have been acquired from faraway lands. One such craft is niello, which is believed to have arrived from Persian (probably by way of India), although some experts claim it was introduced to Siam by the Portuguese during the Ayutthaya period since they were the earliest European traders in the kingdom.

Another factor that distinguishes many of the arts and crafts of southern Thailand is the close cultural ties the region shared with Malaysia and Indonesia long before the introduction of Islam to the area. One example is the art of shadow puppetry, which exists in a handful of Southeast Asian countries but is most celebrated in Malaysia, southern Thailand and Java.

Centuries of cultural evolution, influxes and exchange have lent character to the arts and crafts of southern Thailand.

Excerpts from Andaman Style: Art & Design in Peninsular Siam by Ping Amranand

Southern Delights

Pattani

Blessed with irresistible charms, Pattani's natural scenic beauty, rivers, beaches, waterfalls is second only to the splendid hospitality of its people.

Located on the eastern coast of the southern region adjoining the Gulf of Thailand, it is only a 1-1/2 hour drive from Haad Yai, and borders Yala, Narathiwat and Songkla provinces.

Among its potpourri of diverse cultures, the coexistence of Muslim, Thai and Chinese are the main ethnic groups. While the architecturally-interesting Central Mosque is the Islamic symbol of faith, Wat (temple) Rat Burana (Wat Chang Hai) represents the Buddhists. In addition, Leng Chu Kiang Shrine, the well-known Chinese temple in old China town is worth a visit.

As an alternative to renting a motorbike (prohibited by law in the metro area), look for the tricycle queue in front of the markets. This long preserved Pattani identity is much more than your normal 3 wheeled wonder. Attached to the trike's side is a roofless, rattan carriage of sorts. While providing a panoramic view of the city, ask your driver to take you to Charoen Pradit Street, commonly known as 'Thanon Sai Mo'. Located near the University of Songkhla Nakharin, trendy candle lit cafés await you.

Local markets provide a glimpse into the daily life of fishing and agriculture. Find locally made basketry using yan lipao fern, (Lygodium flexuosum) or the kreung thom thong, gold neilloware that are identified as southern culture. For viewing a very special collection, visit CS Pattani Hotel - the owner's priceless pieces fill two convention rooms. For a collection of a more obscure nature - ask to see the only bird's nests in Thailand that are located cave-like, in the hotels basement. Rich in nourishing substances, the Swallows' (collocalia esculenta) saliva is considered an exceptional delicacy for Asian people.

Flights from Phuket to Haad Yai provide easy access to these culturally exciting lands less travelled.
